ABOUT BRIDGET

Long before the book and keynote, Bridget Hilton was a small town Michigan kid who dreamed of someday becoming a rockstar. At 14, she took every music-related job she could find, from selling band T-shirts out of vans to sweeping concert floors in Detroit. She eventually worked her way into the world's largest record label, helping launch the careers of Taylor Swift, The Weeknd and Rihanna. Then a video of a deaf woman hearing for the first time gave her a new someday: help one person experience the power of sound. She founded LSTN and built it into a global company that sold millions of headphones and speakers, partnered with Google, Delta Air Lines and Amazon, and helped more than 60,000 people hear in 40 countries and all 50 states. Today, through her book Experiential Billionaire, her viral TEDx talk, research with more than 20,000 people, and her Make Someday Today keynote and workshops, Bridget helps people and organizations take action on what matters.

01 MAKE SOMEDAY TODAY

Closing the gap between dreaming and doing.

Your people have ideas they haven't shared, goals they keep postponing, and things they'd try if they felt ready. What becomes possible when they finally begin?

In this entertaining, motivational keynote, Bridget Hilton helps audiences recognize the cost of waiting and discover how much can change with a small first step. Drawing on research with more than 20,000 people about goals and regrets, she explores why we put off what matters and how to move forward before confidence, clarity, or perfect timing arrive.

Bridget brings these ideas to life through her journey building LSTN, a global company that sold millions of products and helped more than 60,000 people hear. Her experience gives audiences a practical framework for pursuing ambitious goals, asking for help, and creating opportunities for others along the way.

For organizations, the connection is clear: people who share what they want to achieve give colleagues a chance to contribute. An introduction, a conversation, or an offer of support can move a goal forward and build a stronger relationship in the process. Audiences leave with a meaningful goal, a concrete first step, and a shared way to help each other follow through.

02 MAKE SOMEDAY TODAY WORKSHOP

What if the person who could help you achieve your biggest goal is already in the room?

Every person brings a unique combination of experiences, knowledge, connections, and perspectives. But most of that potential goes untapped because we rarely share what we're working toward or discover how we can help each other. In this highly interactive workshop, Bridget Hilton harnesses the collective intelligence of the room to turn individual ambitions into shared opportunities for action.

Through guided conversations, collaborative problem-solving, and hands-on exercises, participants uncover unexpected connections, exchange ideas and resources, and help one another overcome obstacles standing between them and their goals. Participants leave with more than inspiration. They leave with new perspectives, meaningful connections, greater accountability, and a concrete first step toward something that matters to them.

03 PROSPER THROUGH CONNECTION

Building a culture where people invest in each other's success.

Your people sit next to each other every day. Most of them have no idea what the person beside them is working toward. What changes when they find out?

When Bridget surveyed more than 20,000 people about the dreams they keep putting off, the biggest category wasn't money or career. It was relationships. People want deeper connections, at home and at work. Yet Gallup finds only about 2 in 10 employees strongly agree they have a best friend at work.

In this warm, interactive keynote, Bridget shows how small moments of connection build trust, belonging and loyalty. She draws on a decade building LSTN with her best friend and co-founder, and on teams she's watched turn from coworkers into collaborators in a single afternoon.

For organizations, the payoff is simple. People stay where they feel seen. When colleagues know each other's goals, they make introductions, share resources and show up for each other. That's engagement you can't buy with a pizza party.

04 LIFE ON PURPOSE

How to build a business that creates a ripple effect.

Your audience has ideas for businesses that could do good. Most assume they need more money, experience or connections before they start. What if they didn't?

Bridget co-founded LSTN by emptying her $5k 401k and no idea how headphones were made. Two weeks later she was on a plane to China. A decade later, the company had sold millions of products, partnered with Google, Delta Air Lines, Amazon and Whole Foods, and helped more than 60,000 people hear for the first time.

In this honest, funny and moving keynote, Bridget shares what it actually takes to build a purpose-led company. She covers the wins, the near-misses, the cardboard-box desk, and the email years later that showed her how far one decision can ripple.

For organizations, the message is practical. Purpose isn't a marketing line. It's a strategy that attracts customers, partners and talent who want to be part of something that matters.
